Emotions and feelings

The same indigo can awaken calm in one of us and uncertainty in another, sometimes even both in one day.

Indigo can awaken in us quiet, a hunch and fear of the unknown. There is no single fixed effect. It depends on our body, experience, culture and situation.

Emotions

Quick and strong reactions that may appear before you are even aware of them.

Depth and quiet

A feeling that the world has calmed down and wants nothing from me. The head slows.

And why?

Dusk and night. Indigo is a colour that switches off needless noise.

Ask yourself

"When did I last find myself in real quiet?"

Intuition and a hunch

A feeling that I know something even though I cannot explain it. A quiet inner voice that speaks up when I am not drowning it out.

And why?

Indigo is linked with the "third eye" and insight. At the same time intuition is not magic, but experience that we have not gone through in words. You can take a feeling seriously without immediately declaring it true.

A question for you

"What do I know, although I cannot prove it?"

Solitude and longing

A feeling that I am alone even when there are people around. Sometimes chosen solitude, sometimes unplanned.

And why?

Dark cold colours increase distance. Indigo can both protect and separate.

If I asked you now

"Is my solitude chosen, or did it happen to me?"

Fear of the unknown

Fear of what hides beneath the surface. Uncertainty about what I will find when I look inward.

And why?

The body reads dark colours as uncertainty. I do not see everything. Fear of the unknown is human and does not have to be weakness.

Try asking yourself

"What am I afraid I will find inside?"

© 2026 MatyRoss · The Art of Wholeness. All rights reserved. Copying, distribution or any other use of the content without the author's written permission is not allowed.

Focus and insight

A clear, calm head. A feeling that I see things in context.

And why?

A deep blue is, according to experience and traditions, the colour of focus and insight. The colour will not give it to you, it can only help create a calm environment.

Ask yourself

"When do I think best?"

Aloofness and coldness

A feeling of distance, of lack of interest. Sometimes protection, sometimes freezing.

And why?

Indigo is a cold colour and cold colours increase distance. For one person it is calm, for another distance.

A question for you

"Is the distance I keep a choice, or a defence?"

Why do I want it right now?

Perhaps you want privacy. Perhaps you are drawn to the firmness of a deep shade. Perhaps you have had enough bright stimuli and appreciate a colour that does not press on you so urgently.

And why?

It can also relate to a memory. A favourite dress, an evening by the water, an old fabric. The colour itself will not say which of the paths belongs to you. Try keeping it near you for a while and then putting it away. Is something more pleasant? Do you notice the difference only in the evening? Or do you enjoy it when painting but do not want it in the room? Research, moreover, does not see indigo as a clear "colour of sadness". In one study some participants linked it with sadness, but the agreement was not so strong.

If I asked you now

"When does indigo do me good and when do I not want to see it?"

When you get lost in the depth

You keep replaying the same conversation and no further information is added. This is a moment for a break from analysis.

And why?

Put the notebook aside, draw the curtains, go outside or do something with your hands. You can also step away from your own head for a while. You are not giving up insight by doing so. You are giving it room to appear by itself.

Try asking yourself

"What would help me return to the body?"

© 2026 MatyRoss · The Art of Wholeness. All rights reserved. Copying, distribution or any other use of the content without the author's written permission is not allowed.

My indigo is not the same as your indigo

A colour itself does not experience anything. We experience it. When we first see a colour together with something strong (a smell, a face, a situation, a word), the experience sticks to it. The colour then becomes a shortcut. It is enough to catch sight of it and the body knows whether it can relax or should withdraw. That is why your own reaction matters most.

- Jeans
  For one comfort and freedom, for another a compulsory uniform in which she never felt like herself.
- The night sky
  For one calm and stars, for another fear of the dark and of loneliness.
- A dark blue uniform
  For one a feeling of order and togetherness, for another school or a job she wants to escape from.
- An indigo room
  For one cosiness, for another tightness and distress.
- The evening bus
  For one a safe return home, for another a journey on which she was afraid.

Why does it attract me when I am not actually calm?

Perhaps it does not express how you feel. Perhaps you are drawn to what you are missing. After a long noise and rush indigo can recall a dusk that finally switches off an excess of stimuli. Sometimes you are tired precisely because everything around you keeps shining and shouting. And suddenly the sight of a dark fabric calms you simply because it is soft, quiet and wants nothing from you.

Why does it seem unpleasant to me, on the contrary?

Indigo is too dark for you. It reminds you of a uniform, a dark room or an environment where you did not feel well. A dislike of indigo does not have to mean that you reject calm or night. Perhaps you are only rejecting a particular memory. Try to tell whether all dark blues bother you or only a certain kind. Faded jeans can be pleasant even if you would not want a dark blue wall even in a photograph.

Some colours we put aside. After a hard period we get rid of a dress or avoid a place. It is a way of protecting ourselves. And when we are ready, indigo often comes back by itself, first as jeans, then as an evening on the balcony.

When to add it and when to take it away

Add it where it calms you and opens something pleasant. Take it away when you catch yourself hiding in it, everything feels too heavy or you finally want more light and people. Notice the changes. Denim does me good, midnight oppresses me. In winter it attracts me more than in hot summer. These are your concrete experiences. They do not have to fit into one answer “I like indigo”.

If I asked you now

“Which sentence about indigo is loudest in me and whose is it actually?”

© 2026 MatyRoss · The Art of Wholeness. All rights reserved. Copying, distribution or any other use of the content without the author’s written permission is not allowed.