Emotions and feelings

The same pink can evoke tenderness in one of us and aversion in another, sometimes even both in one day. There is no single fixed effect. It depends on our body, experience, culture and situation.

Emotions

Quick and strong reactions that can appear even before you realise them.

Tenderness

A wish to caress and be caressed. A softness that does not need to be defended.

And why?

Pink is lightened red, that is, passion softened into gentleness. Light soft colours often evoke in us a wish to slow down and be careful. For some it is a welcome relief, for others a suspicious sweetness.

Ask yourself

"When did I last touch someone with real tenderness?"

Infatuation

Lightness in the body, blushing, a wish to laugh for no reason.

And why?

Pink cheeks are an image of a warmed body. On greeting cards and in adverts, pink is linked with love so often that the connection has settled in us too. Real falling in love has no colour, we only sometimes look for one.

And what if I asked you now?

"What makes my heart lighter today?"

Playfulness

A wish to play, not take yourself seriously and try something silly.

And why?

Light sweet colours are linked with sweets, toys and celebrations. Playfulness does not have to be childish. It is a way to allow yourself joy without performing.

And try answering now

"What would I do today if nobody were watching?"

Shame

A feeling that you must not like what you like. Shame about pink can hit you even in front of the mirror.

And why?

Pink carries a label of sweetness and girlish naivety. Someone who wants to be taken seriously may put it aside. The shame is then not aimed at the colour, but at the idea of what others will think of you.

And now one question for you

"Whose eyes do I imagine when I say it is too much for me?"

© 2026 MatyRoss · The Art of Wholeness. All rights reserved. Copying, distribution or any other use of the content without the author's written permission is not allowed.

Feelings and experience

Deeper and slower states that settle in us. You often recognise them only after a while.

Permission to receive care

Allowing someone to look after you without having to repay it at once.

And why?

Women often give care more easily than they receive it. A soft colour can be a gentle invitation to allow yourself the other as well. Receiving is a gift, not a debt.

Ask yourself

"Can I accept something nice without having to deserve it first?"

Guilt about caring for yourself

A feeling that it is selfish to take something just for yourself.

And why?

Pink bedding lies in the wardrobe because supposedly there is no reason to take it out just for yourself. It is not about the colour, but about the sentence inside that comfort belongs to guests. Try taking it out today and notice what happens.

And what if I asked you now?

"What am I saving for a better occasion?"

Vulnerability

A feeling that you are exposed and that the air around you has softened.

And why?

Light soft tones leave a lot of space. Vulnerability is not weakness, it is a willingness to be seen. Pink can accompany it, but it does not have to sort it out for you. You do not have to open up faster than is safe for you.

And try answering now

"Who can I show myself to today without a mask?"

Longing for childhood

A scent, a fabric or a peony, and childhood is suddenly close.

And why?

Colours attach to specific places. Pink can bring back grandma's garden, or a room where you did not feel at home. Longing or relief shows everything you carry with the colour.

And now one question for you

"What would I give my younger self today?"

© 2026 MatyRoss · The Art of Wholeness. All rights reserved. Copying, distribution or any other use of the content without the author's written permission is not allowed.

My pink is not the same as your pink

The colour itself experiences nothing. We experience it. When we first see a colour together with something strong (a smell, a face, a situation, a word), the experience sticks to it. The colour then becomes a shortcut. That is why your own reaction is the most important.

- Peony
  For one woman summer and grandma's garden, for another a funeral bouquet.
- Pink jumper
  For one comfort and tenderness, for another the role of the good girl.
- Powder lipstick
  For one joy in herself, for another a mask meant to please.
- Pink room
  For one safety, for another a room she did not choose.
- Pink ribbon
  For one a celebration, for another a memory of someone close.

Why does it attract me right now?

Perhaps you had to be the strong one for a long time. Arranging things, enduring, not troubling anyone with your own needs. Then suddenly a pink jumper or a peony stops you. Not necessarily because you have turned into a romantic. Perhaps you are drawn to something that feels softer than the world so far. Equally, a sharp pink can attract you precisely because it cannot be overlooked. You do not want to soften, you want to finally buy the jacket that you like.

Why can't I stand it?

You may see in it a nursery, cheap decoration or the idea of a woman who is mainly supposed to look nice and not argue much. Then perhaps you are not rejecting tenderness. You are rejecting the meaning someone packed together with pink. Try imagining side by side a pink work shirt, an old rose in the garden and a plastic crown. The same colour family, quite different company.

When to keep it and when to take some away

Keep it when you feel good beside it, like looking at it and do not have to talk yourself into a pleasant impression. Take away when the whole seems too sweet, sharp or foreign. First try one change. A different shade, fewer decorations, the company of wood. You do not have to feel tenderness on command. It is legitimate to admit that today it does not suit you.

Ask yourself

"Which sentence about pink is loudest in me? Whose is it, actually?"

© 2026 MatyRoss · The Art of Wholeness. All rights reserved. Copying, distribution or any other use of the content without the author's written permission is not allowed.