Emotions and feelings

The same violet can awaken joy in one of us and yearning in another, sometimes even both in one day. There is no single fixed effect. It depends on our body, experiences, culture and situation.

Emotions

Quick and strong reactions that can appear even before you realise them.

Wonder and the urge to create

Violet can bring a wish to try things differently and not to be afraid it will be odd. Ideas that come from nowhere, and the surprise that you enjoy what others did not choose.

And why?

Violet joins red (body) and blue (calm), and so it is often the colour of combinations you would not look for at first glance. Many makers have come to love it precisely because it belongs nowhere. It does not ask you to fit in, only to try.

Ask yourself

"When did I last do something differently from others?"

Desire and sensuality

Warmth in the body, a craving for touch, voice and scent. A passion that does not need to announce itself and is still noticeable.

And why?

Violet is close to red and pink. Surveys sometimes link it with eroticism and femininity. Wine and plum tones are the most common image of this. Sensuality here does not have to be loud, it can be private.

And what if I asked you now?

"What draws you, and you do not admit it?"

Pride and dignity

A feeling that I am worth something and that I matter. Sometimes healthy pride, sometimes fragile protection.

And why?

Violet was long the colour of emperors and then also of the women's movement. So it carries a feeling of dignity, but also of claiming a place. Especially dark and festive shades can straighten your back.

And try answering now

"What am I rightly proud of?"

Yearning and half-mourning

A quiet sadness that is no longer sharp. Memories that hurt more gently than before.

And why?

Violet was the colour of the passage of grief into the next period. In the Victorian era half-mourning, in Thailand the mourning colour of widows. The sadness does not disappear here, it only changes and grows a little lighter.

And now one question for you

"What are you missing today?"

© 2026 MatyRoss · The Art of Wholeness. All rights reserved. Copying, distribution or any other use of the content without the author's written permission is not allowed.

Feelings and experience

Deeper and slower states that settle in us. You often recognise them only after a while.

A feeling of being different

A feeling that I do not fit in and that nobody quite understands me. Loneliness and pride at once.

And why?

Violet is a colour of exceptions. It does not fit a traffic light, flags or ordinary uniforms. For some freedom, for others solitude. It depends whether being different is your choice.

Ask yourself

"Is my being different chosen, or did someone force it on me?"

Shyness about being seen

At home in front of the mirror violet pleases you, before you leave you take it off. The colour has not changed, the idea of who will see you in it has.

And why?

Looking at a colour is one experience. Knowing that others are looking at you in it is another. Violet can carry a feeling of making a statement even when you only wanted to put on a nice jumper. Sometimes a particular shade or cut does not suit you, and then there is no need to look for a hidden story.

And what if I asked you now?

"What would happen if nothing happened at all?"

Calm and transcendence

A feeling that there is something bigger than what I see. Wonder, silence, sometimes a light dizziness.

And why?

For centuries violet has been linked with the church, ritual and the sacred. In the yoga tradition it is linked with the crown chakra, although this link is newer than the chakra itself. Often dusk, a lilac in bloom or music is enough.

And try answering now

"When did I last feel part of something bigger?"

Dreaminess and distraction

You circle the same question, depth turns into rumination and a pleasant immersion becomes a roundabout.

And why?

There is too much depth when you move around the same thing for too long. Then do not add a deeper violet, another interpretation and another meditation. Shrink the dark area, lighten the surroundings or move to an activity where you meet your body and the world.

And now one question for you

"What would help you return to your body today?"

© 2026 MatyRoss · The Art of Wholeness. All rights reserved. Copying, distribution or any other use of the content without the author's written permission is not allowed.

My violet is not the same as your violet

The colour itself experiences nothing. We experience it. When we first see a colour together with something strong (a smell, a face, a situation, a word), the experience sticks to it. The colour then becomes a shortcut. One glimpse is enough and the body knows whether it can relax or should pull back. That is why your own reaction is the most important.

- Lilac
  For one woman spring and grandmother, for another a funeral or a scent she cannot stand.
- A violet dress
  For one a festive moment, for another church, or a role she had to play.
- Lavender
  For one holiday and calm, for another a childhood wardrobe and the scent on laundry.
- A violet bruise
  For one an injury, for another just the colour after a fall that turns yellow in time.
- Violet chocolate
  For one a childhood reward, for another a reminder of something that is no more.

Why does it draw me when I actually do not feel like violet?

Perhaps it does not express how you feel. Perhaps you are drawn to what you lack. You have enough of what is immediately visible and audible, and you are drawn to something quieter and deeper that you do not have to explain at once. After a period when you mainly worked, cared or held everything together, a question can arise. Who am I when I am not fulfilling any role? Violet can accompany a need for privacy, imagination or a search for new meaning. It can also recall a garden from childhood or a favourite dress. Sometimes a beautiful shade simply stops you.

Why does it seem unpleasant to me, on the contrary?

A rich violet is too heavy or sharp for you. It reminds you of a ceremony, sadness, strictness or an environment in which you did not feel well. A dark room also looks entirely different from the same shade on a flower outdoors. A dislike of violet does not have to mean you reject beauty or depth. Perhaps you only reject a particular memory. Try to tell whether you mind all violet or only a certain form of it. Lilac can be beautiful even if you do not want a richly violet wall even in a photograph.

When to add it and when to take it away

Add it where it pleases you and opens something pleasant. Take it away when you catch yourself hiding in it, everything seems too mysterious or you finally want more light and people. Notice the changes. Lavender does me good, plum weighs on me. In a painting I want it big, in clothes I do not feel comfortable in it yet. We also put some colours aside. After a hard period we get rid of a dress or avoid a place. It is a way of protecting ourselves. And when we are ready, violet often comes back by itself, first as a scarf. These are your specific experiences. They do not have to fit into the single answer “I like violet”.

© 2026 MatyRoss · The Art of Wholeness. All rights reserved. Copying, distribution or any other use of the content without the author’s written permission is not allowed.

Ask yourself

“Which sentence about violet is loudest in me? Whose is it really?”

© 2026 MatyRoss · The Art of Wholeness. All rights reserved. Copying, distribution or any other use of the content without the author’s written permission is not allowed.